

2015: Kaitlan Collins Spouts Anti-Soros, White Replacement Talking Points on Fox News

Description

USA: Video footage from 2015 has resurfaced showing now-CNN anchor Kaitlan Collins making an appearance on Fox News to spout off anti-Soros talking points on mass migration – talking points that bear a stunning resemblance to those derided as “antisemitic” and as being based in “white replacement theory” by Collins’ current employer, CNN.

Collins, who at the time was working for The Daily Caller, joined Fox News as a guest in 2015 to address the role of globalist villain George Soros in the migration crisis that has seen the demographic make-ups and cultures of Western nations, including the United States, totally overhauled in rapid succession.

At the time, the US southern border was experiencing a massive surge in illegal border crossings, and millions of third-world “refugees” were pouring into Europe; in the early stages of the multi-pronged illegal migration crisis that continues to this day.

According to Collins, a “data dump” that she’d reviewed indicated that George Soros was at the center of the issue.

“Ok so, George Soros is this foreign-born left-wing guy who essentially wants to change the nature of our country,” Collins told Fox News.

“And, in this data dump, one of the memos was about the refugee crisis and it made three points,” she went on. “They think that they’ve been successful in influencing immigration policy across the world. They think that the refugee crisis is an opportunity to continue doing so, and they think the refugee crisis is the new normal.”

Collins went on to add a further description of George Soros, who she described as a “staunch” “open borders” advocate and reaffirmed that the anti-Western migration crisis is part of Soros’ “immigration agenda.”

“George Soros is this guy who is a staunch advocate for open borders. He wants people to be able to go wherever they want, whenever they want, for whatever reason. And for him, he sees this immigration policy, this crisis, as a vehicle to further his immigration agenda.”

The Kaitlan Collins of 2015 is a stark contrast to the Kaitlan Collins of 2023, who works as one of CNN’s star anchors.

The network regularly dismisses talk of George Soros and his agenda as being part of an “antisemitic conspiracy theory” and derides those expressing similar views to 2015 Collins on mass migration as conspiratorial adherents to the “white replacement theory.”

On Wednesday, Collins hosted a CNN town hall with President Trump and has been slammed by both the left and right in the town hall’s aftermath.

Media watchdogs say that Collins interrupted President Trump hundreds of times and critics are saying that she turned the town hall, in which Trump fielded questions from voters, into a debate between herself and the 45th President.

At one point in the town hall, as Collins spoke over Trump and incorrectly “fact-checked” him in real-time, Trump turned to her and said, “You are a nasty person.”
