

Big Pharma says most adults have mental illness and require prescriptions for expensive pharmaceutical “cures”

Description

To keep the gravy train moving, the pharmaceutical industry has teamed up with the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to recommend that all adults in the United States under the age of 65 be screened for anxiety disorders.

A panel of “experts” commissioned by HHS says that all people in the U.S. regardless of age should also be evaluated for depression. The goal is to get as many Americans hooked on mental illness drugs as possible so Big Pharma executives can rake in the dough.

The so-called U.S. Preventative Services Task Force (PSTF) issued a guidance about all this earlier in the week, marking the first time such recommendations have ever been made officially. (Related: If you are depressed, why not try to change your diet instead of getting hooked on drugs?)

The PSTF also wants all children and adolescents – and heck, why not throw in babies as well? – to take pharmaceutical drugs for brain issues, many of which stem from the relentless tyranny imposed by the government throughout the Fauci Flu (covid) scamdemic.

“This is a really important step forward,” said American Psychological Association CEO Arthur C. Evans, who is simply overjoyed at the thought of all Americans being forced to live and breathe mind-altering drugs. “Screening for mental health conditions is critical to our ability to help people at the earliest possible moment.”

Thanks to Obamacare, health insurers could be forced to drug all Americans deemed to suffer from mental illness

According to The Wall Street Journal (WSJ), the task force behind these recommendations is comprised of 16 “independent volunteer experts,” all of whom just so happen to be pushing a pro-pharmaceutical agenda.

These so-called “experts” issue guidance protocols like this on a routine basis, and thanks to the Affordable Care Act (ACA), also known as Obamacare, health insurers are typically required to cover all services associated with those recommendations.

In other words, if it becomes the case that all Americans are “screened” and deemed to be in desperate need of mind-altering pharmaceuticals, then health insurers will be forced to hand out those pharmaceuticals like candy, enriching Big Pharma to the hilt with billions of dollars in new profits.

That is what all of this is about, by the way: money. It is also about destroying what little humanity remains in the already deeply brainwashed “herd” of society, which is being systematically stripped of all cognition and the ability to think.

By getting all Americans hooked on brain-bending drugs from a laboratory, Big Pharma will not only profit but also gain even more control over people’s minds, and thus their thoughts and actions.

“Pro tip: Psychologists are the most crazy,” wrote a commenter, making an excellent point about how many who work in the field of mental health and social services are the most psychotic people in society who require the very interventions they try to push on others.

“Yup,” responded another. “They are subconsciously trying to cure themselves.”

“Of scabies and self-loathing,” responded yet another.

Someone else pointed out that anxiety and depression can actually be helpful.

“The former forces you to think your way out while the latter forces you to rethink how you got in the mess you are in, whether biochemically, neurologically, genetically, or even medicationally.”

“If you research, you’ll find ‘Action of this drug (antidepressant) on the brain is not known,’” this same person added. “Even if they prescribe an appropriate drug, they don’t even know what action it takes to have the sometimes desired effect.”
