

Breaking: New Evidence of Voter Fraud in Brazil's Presidential Election Revealed (Video)

Description

BRAZIL: Following the proof of voter fraud, Jair Bolsonaro and his party formally requested an annulment of the October 30th presidential election result.

Argentinean television has revealed new evidence of voting machine fraud in around 280,000 voting machines that were pre-2020 models used in the October 30, 2022, Brazilian Presidential elections. Argentine political consultant Fernando Cerimedo asserted on the program that statistical analysis conclusively shows the result was fraudulent.

This is the latest claim of a long line of professionals who have evidence that Communist and former prisoner Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva (Lula) did not beat Brazillian President Jair Bolsonaro in the presidential elections. Instead, it appears the former inmate was installed by his appointed and equally corrupt Supreme Court.

As reported previously at RAIR Foundation USA, Lula claims that he beat Bolsonaro in what was one of the tightest presidential races. However, following an audit of the election results, the military concluded that there was a "possible security risk" in the country's voting system. Furthermore, they disclosed several flaws in the electronic voting system. According to a statement by the Northeastern Military Command, which is one of eight Military Commands of the Brazilian Army:

Defense Minister General-of-Army Paulo Sérgio Nogueira made it clear that there are signs of fraud, that the Supreme Electoral Court (TSE) hides data, and that the demonstrations should continue.

At least 100 electronic ballot boxes did not contain a single vote for Bolsonaro. 5 million votes were discarded. Several electronic voting machines' Audits showed they changed some voting percentages. The results claim that Lula allegedly won 50.9% of the vote and Bolsonaro 49.1%.

Slay News reported that Minister of Defense Paulo Sergio Nogueira de Oliveira sent his report on possible election fraud to the radical leftist Supreme Electoral Court (TSE); however, he did not expect the corrupted court to investigate the situation:

However, the TSE consists of diehard Lula supporters.

The military's report warns of "relevant security risks" discovered in the election system.

"It is not possible to say the electronic voting system is free from the influence of malware that could affect its outcome," says the report.

Yet the TSE will likely ignore the report, much to the outrage of the Brazilian people.

Now President Bolsonaro's PL party has also submitted its report on electoral fraud.

The report states that the PL will request "an annulment of the election" because "it is not possible to validate the results of all the electronic voting machines."

Following the proof of voter fraud, Bolsonaro and his conservative Partido Liberal (PL) political party formally requested an annulment of the October 30th presidential election result.

However, the president of The Superior Electoral Court of Brazil (TSE), Alexandre de Moraes, declared that the PL's complaint was "an offense against democratic norms" and that it sought to "encourage criminal and anti-democratic movements."

The compromised court added that the lawsuit had been filed "in bad faith" and fined the party 22.9 million reais ($4.3 million).

Corrupted Supreme Court paves the way for Election Fraud.

As previously reported, the left's goal was to either oust Bolsonaro from power during his presidency or force him to lose the presidential election. The communists could not oust him from power because of his extraordinary popularity. But they just about guaranteed his defeat in the election as a fully electronic ballot box was used to make sure Brazil's former president, Lula, won. Lula is a convict, turned into a presidential candidate by the Supreme Court.

Lula was released from prison on November 19th by the judges of the Supreme Court that he himself nominated during his 16 years of socialist rule over Brazil. These judges counted the votes and certified this year's election.

It was also a Communist-infested Supreme Court in Venezuela that paved the way for Hugo Chavez to gain power.

Before the election, Bolsonaro repeatedly warned that the electoral system was open to fraud and accused electoral authorities of favoring his leftist adversary. Despite all of the warnings, Lula and the corrupt Supreme Court were able to steal the election. Bolsonaro has yet to concede or congratulate his opponent.

Massive Protests

Since the fraudulent presidential runoff election, millions of Brazilians have been protesting on the streets daily. The over 3 million Brazilians wearing yellow and green, the national flag colors, are demanding that the armed forces intervene to prevent the communists from taking power.

Demonstrators protested the election fraud outside several Military Command headquarters. In addition, they gathered outside the military barracks of at least 12 states to request the support of the Armed Forces to intervene and lead a “federal intervention” against Lula’s future government.

Supreme Court targets protesters and truckers

Minister Alexandre de Moraes of the corrupted Supreme Court ordered the blocking of the bank accounts of 43 people and companies suspected of helping fund the peaceful protests. The minister claimed that ten people and 33 companies are potentially funding “illegal and anti-democratic actions.” Authorities sought to shut down the truckers by freezing many of their bank accounts:

“It is necessary, appropriate and urgent to block the bank accounts of those investigated, given the possibility of using resources to finance illicit and undemocratic acts, in order to stop the injury or threat to law.”

Brazilian leftists are following the playbook of their Canadian government comrades on how to crush peaceful protesters and punish dissenters. In February 2022, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau froze the bank accounts of citizens who participated in or financially contributed to the Trucker’s Freedom Convoy.

While the world watched, Trudeau was able to crush possibly the most peaceful mass protest in human history, instigated by truckers from across Canada. What lengths will Brazil’s corrupted Supreme Court and convict Lula go to seize complete control of the country?
