Description

Dr. Poornima Wagh, with doctorates in virology and immunology, and a 20-year career as a laboratory researcher and scientist, describes how her lab tried to properly isolate Sars-Cov-2 but wasn't able to.

In the interview, she describes the methods used by virologists and their futile efforts to isolate viruses using scientific methods.

The whole experiment was repeated several times...

"...They found the same things we did. They didn't find SARS Cov 2, they didn't find the genome, they didn't find anything. Nothing was found.

We called Robert Redfield, director of the CDC, to show him the findings. He said 'I don't care what you find, just call it SARS-Cov-2'

We asked the CDC to send us a sample of the isolated virus. They said they didn't have them, stopped responding to our calls, but then the FBI raided our lab..."
