

British funeral director: 'Number of deaths skyrocketed after start of corona vaccination'

Description

UK: British funeral director John O'Looney has revealed to architect and film producer Robin Monotti how he experienced this "fake pandemic. "Mortality was at normal levels and was even slightly lower than 2019," he wrote in a message on Telegram.

O'Looney said many of his colleagues turned off their refrigerators around Christmas because "nobody died. "We started vaccinating here on January 6, and then almost immediately the number of deaths went through the roof. I have never experienced such a high mortality rate in 15 years as a funeral director."

He posted this message on YouTube under a video about corona. It was liked over 300 times after which his YouTube account was deleted without warning for allegedly violating policy.

As a funeral director I commented in a Covid video comments section telling people exactly what my experience was firsthand during this fake pandemic last year The death rate was totally normal in fact it was a little bit down on 2019 and towards Christmas many of my colleagues were actually turning their fridges off because there was no one dying. We began vaccinating on January 6 locally here and the death rate went through the roof almost immediately within the same week for three months I've never known a death rate like it in 15 years as an undertaker. This comment was liked over three hundred times and then my YouTube account was deleted without warning for apparently violating their policies - being honest basically

At the beginning of the “corona pandemic,” O’Looney, who lives in Milton Keynes, made headlines when he warned that bodies might remain in hospitals because next of kin could not afford a funeral or cremation due to the lockdown.

He told the BBC that all the focus was on increasing cooling capacity in mortuaries while no consideration was given to people who could not arrange a funeral due to financial difficulties.
