

Hilarious: Woke Twitter Employees Are “Terrified” About Elon Musk’s Purchase Of Controlling Stake

Description

USA: Senator Rand Paul weighed into the “what is a woman?” controversy Thursday, calling for a celebration of “real women” in America, rather than men who have “had some kind of surgery.”

Paul made the comments in an interview with Newsmax, further referring to USA Today’s recent decision to award assistant secretary for health Rachel Levine, a biological male, Woman of the Year.

“I mean, what kind of bizarre world are we living in now that the woman of the year is really a man that has had some kind of surgery to remove their secondary sexual characteristics?” Paul questioned.

“That’s the woman of the year we’re supposed to be celebrating?” he continued, adding “What about real women?”

“We’re not going to celebrate real women who are doing amazing in our country in every occupation you can imagine?” the Senator further urged.

“We’re going to let men who now think they’re women get women’s prizes?” he lamented, adding “I mean, that’s just an amazing insult.”

The Senator also asserted that Supreme Court nominee Ketanji Brown Jackson’s inability to define a woman is disturbing, noting “if she can’t define women, I think she’s going to be part of the problem.”

“You know, Senator Blackburn asked her a question and said, ‘Can you define a woman?’ Well, if you’re not even willing to answer that question and many of the questions she has been unwilling to answer — if you can’t answer the question, ‘What is a woman?’ or the definition of a woman, how is she going to adjudicate Title IX cases that have to do with women or women in sports?” Paul asked.

“How is she going to adjudicate whether a boy who swims for UPenn can all of a sudden switch and pretend to be a girl and swim on the girls’ team?” he added.

Paul concluded that the judge is “not going to be able to adjudicate any of these things, or perhaps she is telegraphing us that she is going to be able to adjudicate them in such that you can be whatever you feel like you want to be that day, which will lead to a ruination of women’s sports and lead to really chaos in women’s sports and women’s athletics.”
