Military Situation In Eastern Ukraine On March 27, 2022 (Map Update)

If that's a total disaster, what would Zelenskyy and his cabinet fleeing into exile as Russians blitzed the country in three or four days have been, as some on here were predicting?

Far from a total disaster. With a force like Russia, which has an entire transatlantic alliance devoted to it, the third largest army in Europe putting it into a protracted phase of conflict with small losses contained along its periphery is commendable. To date, Kherson is the largest trophy taken.

Indeed, the one significant settlement on the Azov shore has held out from complete capture this far, primarily under a regiment of the national guard, and not too much else for a siege of this duration.

Russia did not repeat Maidan over this past month, and whatever CIA footprint may have been present in that revolution, the latter clearly enjoyed much, much more allegiance from popular sentiment.
