

Pfizer CEO: It's Time For Fourth Covid-19 Shot, Boosters Could Be Yearly

Description

We're distracted by Russia/Ukraine, but they're still pushing this shot on Americans.

The listing of the mask mandate was just an additional distraction that should've kept us focused on the Ukraine conflict and further from the gruesome policies that were plotting against our own country.

The CEO of Pfizer has announced the need for yet another shot to combat Covid-19, despite the hard push to sell the effectiveness of the third shot.

Dr Albert Bourla appeared on CBS' Face The Nation Sunday, where he said that a fourth shot has become "necessary."

"Right now, the way that we have seen, it is necessary, a fourth booster right now," Dr. Bourla said. "The protection that you are getting from the third, it is good enough, actually quite good for hospitalizations and deaths. It's not that good against infections but doesn't last very long. But we are just submitting those data to the FDA and then we will see what the experts also will say outside Pfizer."

We are making a vaccine that covers omicron and all the other variants," he said.

Dr. Bourla said he believes that even though Covid isn't quite behind us, things have still gone better than they could have. He also believes that "gradually" people can start going back to their "normal lives."

"But we need to understand that the COVID will not go away in the years to come," he continued. We will have to live- to learn how to live with it, and we can, as we are living with many- so many other viruses."

When asked if he thought booster shots would turn into a yearly thing for Covid, he replied, "I think so."

According to the CDC, "65.2% of the total U.S. population, have been fully vaccinated." Of course, the definition of "fully vaccinated" has changed more than once during this pandemic, so who knows for sure what that number actually is. The CDC also said that "49.9% of the total booster-eligible population has not yet received a booster dose.”
