Real Raw News stated that Putin rejected Biden's phone calls because he doesn't think Biden is the leader of the U.S.

Putin refused Biden's calls, and he reached out to the admin's principal adversary, Trump, who monitors the Russia-Ukraine crisis from his Florida command center, Mar-A-Lago.

"They've talked three times in the last 30 days, with Putin initiating each call," our source said. Trump and Putin have an amicable, cautious relationship.

"I will not speak with fake leaders, but I will speak with you," Putin reportedly told Trump.

Putin asked for Trump's opinion because it would be credible evidence that Biden's regime was conspiring with Russian separatists to stage a false flag in Ukraine and blamed Russia for the damage.

When Trump asked for copies of said audio tapes, Putting stated that he couldn't share the tapes without knowing Trump's intentions.

"If those tapes exist and are really real, then we've won big time. But I need them in a huge way. I have to get them authenticated," Trump told Putin.

"Trump would like to believe Putin but knows he could easily be bluffing. Putin does what's in Putin's best interest, and he's not above subterfuge. He's former KGB. So, he shifted gears; he wanted to know the disposition of the U.S. military," our source said.

"President Trump, I understand a significant part of the U.S. military is loyal to you, but many still support this man Joseph Biden. I'm unclear how, shall we say, this will play out if Biden orders combat troops to intervene," Putin said.

"President Putin, I won't discuss that with you. But I'll tell you something: If, and only if, I have real proof of a false flag, you won't have to worry about that. Our military will not go into an illegal war with your country. But right now, you have 150,000 troops and tanks, an enormous number, a number I don't think you've done before, on your border, and that's your right, but it makes people watching you want to know just what's going on," Trump said.

Putin's troop buildups were proactive and promised Trump that Russia was taking all the steps to avoid conflict.

"If war happens, history will not see Russia as the aggressor," Putin added.
